Profile Of A Religion

Disciples Of Christ Indigenous To America

By Marilou Stuebe
Of The Southern Illinoisan
(One of a Series)

The largest indigenous American religious body is the Disciples of Christ, an attempt to bring Christians together in a church organized according to the principles of primitive Christianity.

The group as it presently exists had a dual beginning.

At the time when the great western migration in the United States began, many of the pioneers were placed in churchless situations.

In 1803, Barton W. Stone of Kentucky conceived a plan to gather in these people by retreating to a form of church organization which he claimed was the New Testament plan for the Christian churches.

He called his group the Christian Church. About the same time, Thomas Campbell, his son, Alexander and Walter Scott conceived essentially the same plan in their territory of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

In 1832, the two groups merged. The names "Disciples of Christ" and "Christian Church" are now used interchangeably for churches of the same communion.

No Creeds

Members of the Disciples of Christ Churches hold to no creeds. They have as doctrines, only those things which are found in the New Testament, or can be reasonably inferred therefrom.

They believe in the Bible as the inspired word of God, although interpretation is reserved to each believer. The group contains both liberal and fundamentalists members and churches.

Each congregation is autonomous, and is usually served by an ordained minister. However, in an emergency an elder or layman can conduct the worship service, and elders usually are responsible for the communion service.

The church is administered in a democratic fashion, with the pastor, board of elders and deacons serving as leaders. Each has its own area of responsibility, but matters of importance must be acted on by the congregation as a whole.

Advisory Body

The Disciples of Christ churches cooperate in the International Convention in matters of missions, charities and administration. Membership in the group is voluntary. The convention is an advisory, rather than legislative body.

Just as the Disciples are left free to interpret the Scripture for themselves, they are free to worship in their own manners. There are no pre-set rituals.

Certain characteristics do mark the Disciples' services, however. The Lord's Supper, not regarded as a sacrament, is offered every Sunday. Also, at the close of each Sunday service, those who wished to unite with the faith are given the opportunity to do so.

A person seeking admission into the faith is required to make public confession of his faith, his acceptance of Christ as savior, and be baptized by immersion.

Immersion is regarded as the only form of Baptism authorized by the New Testament. Only persons who are old enough to know what they are doing are baptized.

Although, the Disciples baptize in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, the nature of the Trinity has never been defined by them.

Most Disciples reject the doctrine of original sin, and so attach no washing away of original sin to Baptism. They see the ordinance as an act of surrender and obedience to Christ's will.

They do believe that men are sinful until they are saved by Christ, however. Walter Scott, suggested that this salvation was accomplished according to a five-fold plan: faith, repentance, baptism, newness of life and the gift of the Holy Spirit.

Disciple belief in life after death varies. Some members believe in a literal heaven and literal hell.

Others see eternal life as a time of peace and complete communion with God. Others profess no delineated beliefs on the subject. Almost all do believe in the immortality of the soul, however.

The over 8,000 Disciples of Christ Churches in the United States have nearly 2 million members, all adult communicants.

Ecumenical Council

American Bishops Take Background To Conference

By Jules Loh
AP Staff Writer

America's Catholic bishops will take with them to the Second Vatican Council next October a background of lively participation in this rarely used form of church government.

At the last council, a century ago, 46 prelates from the United States participated. Some — notably Bishop Augustin Verot of Savannah, Ga., and Bishop Edward Fitzgerald of Little Rock Ark. — treated the staid assembly to some forthright examples of Yankee determination.

Bishop Fitzgerald was one of only two participants who said "non placet" I am not pleased on the final vote to adopt a definition of papal infallibility. The other was an Italian, Bishop Aloisio Riccio of Cajazzo.

Bishop Verot also was opposed, but he made his reputation mainly through fiery speeches on lesser issues.

He thought it was a "disgraceful spectacle" for priests to hunt with guns and felt there should be a church law against it. He wanted the council to take a strong stand on racial justice and pro-labor issues.

Registration for the District 10 convention of Christian Churches will begin Sunday at the First Christian, Carbondale, host church for the conference.

Mrs. Ray Eddings is general chairman of the Sept. 16 convention. Mary Jo Stroup will serve as registrar for First Christian members.

Representatives of nine area churches will attend the convention with special sessions for all ages.

The Rev. Howard Short, editor of "The Christian," national weekly publication of the Disciples of Christ, will be the main speaker. The first family night of the church year will be at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday in the fellowship hall of the church.

posed a canon "anathematizing any who dare to assert that blacks are not of the human family."

The biggest issue of the First Vatican Council—whether to define papal infallibility—was not even on the proposed agenda when the assembly convened in 1869.

The main point of controversy wasn't whether the Pope was infallible when speaking on matters of faith and morals only 15 of the 601 bishops present were opposed to the doctrine but whether it was advisable to define the doctrine at that time.

Most of the Americans felt it was not.

Archbishops Peter Kenrick of St. Louis and John Purcell of Cincinnati and Bishop Michael Domenec of Pittsburgh led U. S. opposition. They claimed, one observer reported, "that the definition would be an insurmountable obstacle to the conversion of Protestants in the United States."

According to this writer, Domenec felt that "if here be no setback, in 30 or 40 years the number of Catholics will be greater in North America than in Italy; and they will be not merely nominal, but real practicing Catholics. The only calamity that can destroy so fair a hope would be the doctrine of papal infallibility."

Present count: Italy 49 million Catholics, practicing and nominal; North America 50 million.
